Holidays by rail in Europe

Why go by rail?

Is it really green and clean? Rail travel is already one of the most environmentally-friendly ways of travelling. Most European services are powered by electricity, reducing both local air pollution and the amount of CO2 generated overall.

Eurostar is the first train to go carbon neutral isn't it?

Eurostar has become the first rail operator to become officially "Carbon Neutral", whilst in mountainous countries like Switzerland, trains actually return electricity to the grid while travelling downhill - on some routes this means the net power usage is close to zero.

Do you have a baggage allowance on trains as you do on an aeroplane?

No baggage weight Restrictions. Take as much as you can carry!

A plane is much faster isn't it?

It can be but London to Paris and Brussels is a close call and you get to see the countryside by travelling through it.

Do these holidays start from somewhere close? Yes it's very convenient. Start from St Pancras by Eurostar.

I don't fancy being on a strange railway station without guidance though! A Tour Manager travels with you.
